They are Benjamin, Michael, Nathan and Samuel Kunkel, respectively eighty, seventy-eight, seventy and sixty-one years old. They own a valuable farm and have $40,000 out at interest, but still they do all their own farmwork and housework unaided, and will not consent to employ a woman in any capacity or have any association whatever with the gentle sex

The Kunkel family included two sisters after the death of the parents. The sisters never married, but resided with their brothers in the ancestral homestead.
They suddenly avoided the companionality of men, as their brothers do that of women.

Ten years ago the sisters died, and since then the brothers have lived among themselves, industrious and contented. They seldom leave home, and then only or a few hours, to transact business at he nearest village. Hesides carefully tilling their 155 rich acres, they take tur

Scheele then requested Sheriff Clarkson not to allow any one class to visit him during the night, as he wished to enjoy himself and did not want to be disturbed.

Scheele won most of the games, which made him geod-natured.

At 1330 belock the condemned man finished playing cards, but he remained up until 2.30 when he sought his couch, and twenty into-utes later he was in a deep slumber in which he remained until after daylight.

This is the story of scheder's crime:

New Caman was a "no license" town and a Law and order League had been formed to secure the enforcement of the law. Among others who had been prosecuted for selling liquor was Scheele, and upon the day of the crime, when Constable Dracker went to the house of the German saloon-keeper the latter had barricaded his door, refusing to admit the constable.

Drucker then went back to the centre of the village and procured assistance. When he and his men strived at the house again they proceeded to the front door.

When Dricker was within twenty feet of the house there was within twenty feet of the house there was a flash, a loud report, and the constable, throwing up his hands, exclaimed, "Brant, I'm shot."

These words were said to William Brant, who accompanied the constable, and they were the last ever uttered by him. Death followed immediately afterward wounded himself in the head with a pistol, and was kept under guard at his house for several days while suffering from this wound.

Last night he expressed sorrow for his deed deat.

Last night he expressed sorrow for his deed and said: "God knows it was unpremedi-ated." Scheele died without a struggle when the drop fell. WILL THE SHERIFF BE JAILED?
